it was relatively easy for parents to guide their children's exposure to outside influences. With the arrival of television, it became harder and harder for children to remain children.

We at WSFA-TV have tried, through quality programming, to bring you the kind of entertainment that is more than entertaining . . . it's educational, it's informative, and it's the kind of real-life situation you'd want your children to see. But we haven't stopped here. We're continuing to explore new avenues of expression and when we find them . . . you'll be the first to know.
